Amanda Beiler's pain runs deeper than the visible and lasting scars on her hands. Living alone, she keeps to herself until one day a baby is left on her step, and she is forced back into the community to find help and answers. Uncertain, she reluctantly seeks help from her new neighbor just down the road on her once-private country lane. Seth Stolzhus has just moved to Coach from his old community, both to start a new life and also to escape deep wounds of his own. Setting up shop as a furniture maker, he helps Amanda temporarily with a cradle, and an offer to help her watch the baby boy until everything is figured out with aid from the bishop. But just when a plan is in place to find a new home for the boy, an unwelcome surprise from her past proves to her that maybe God doesn't want the boy in anyone else's hands but her own. Feelings begin to develop between Amanda and Seth, and Jacob—the name Amanda's decided to give the boy—is a large part of the reason why. But each of them fear revealing painful truths about themselves for fear of rejection and what the other will think. Yet Jacob proves to be more than just an enigma, he becomes the focus of a new love, shared between the three of them. And with God's help, some truths might just be revealed that lead to a solution that will heal them all...Read this sweet, clean and wholesome Amish romance by Emma Maas today.
