In the cold streets of Newark, Bishop and Ros names dont ring bells. Their names are the bell; as in you better act like you know who youre around or you better be ready to run. Though they got the game on lock, theyll quickly learn that even the coldest niggas can be taken out by just one weak link on their team. Tarik has worked for Bishop and Ro since he could spell the word joog, but now hes ready for more. Intent on showing his bosses who should really be running the show, Tarik gets so caught up in the sick game hes playing that he doesnt even realize hes about to have his good luck charm snatched from right up under his nose. Kenya, Tariks ride or die, has finally reached her breaking point with her boyfriends lies and betrayal. Tired of being dogged out by the only man shes ever loved, Kenya begins to explore her options and quickly finds herself in the arms of her mans boss and archenemy. Tarik will quickly learn that shit gets real when the rabbit has the gun. Its clear that he can dish it, but when Tarik cant take the backfire, will he fight to the death for what belongs to him, or will he give it all up in a cloud of blazing glory?
