Small town, big trouble. A brother's vengeance. A father's debt. A daughter betrayed. After a year of false trails and dead ends, Tull Roebuck closes in on the gamblers who shot his brother in cold blood. He's tracked them from the booming tent towns of Nevada across a wild and unforgiving landscape. The trail brings him to the outskirts of a two-horse town called Jericho Springs. It's a town where the folks don't take kindly to strangers, where the sheriff takes an instant dislike to Tull. Before Tull gets revenge, the gamblers prey upon another unwary man. An old-timer is murdered after a poker game. The man leaves a daughter behind, along with valuable lands. Without her father's protection, the beautiful girl is being forced off her homestead and into a cruel marriage. Despite his hardened heart, Tull vows to help. He knows he's outgunned but avenging his brother's murder also means justice for an innocent woman. Even if he pays with his life.
