He's the biggest manwhore in San Francisco. So why the hell can't I stay away from him? Elliot Santos had heard enough about the mysterious manwhore who lived in the apartment building above his cafe, Sugar, to know he didn't think very highly of them. Number Nine had sent a string of morning-afters through the doors of Sugar to caffeinate before making their walk of shame. The details? rarely spared. Elliot knew that Number Nine apparently didn't have a type, except male, and that he always sent them away wanting more. The last thing Elliot wants is to fall for a man that doesn't believe in love - the one thing he so desperately wants in his life. But when he bumps into a very naked man chasing a very naughty dachshund on his morning delivery run - he's already smitten. Until he sees that naked guy happens to live in apartment number nine. Love? That's exactly what I'm trying to avoid. Ken Donohugh made the cross-country move to San Francisco after his divorce. He needed a fresh start. A clean slate. The chance to do whatever he wanted and not face the consequences. Even if that meant bedding every guy within a 2-mile radius. Whatever it took to get love out of Ken's system - he was going to try it. That is until a very sweet bakery owner named Elliot comes to his rescue. He's the one guy he's sworn off having. If Ken ruins things with Elliot, that means no more coffee and delicious sweet treats at Sugar. So why is it that he can't stop thinking about the guy? One day you'll find someone who'll appreciate just how intensely you love. With two men who want such different things in life, Elliot and Ken must navigate what their feelings mean. Can Elliot learn to love a little less? And will Ken ever be able to tame his ferocious sweet tooth?
