Product Description In this gripping tale of supernatural love Brigitte, a poor black woman who works as a waitress, has to make ultimate power moves. Ones that may cost her, her life. Excerpt This wasn't what he had planned at all. According to how he had pictured it, today was supposed to be the happiest day of her life. He would have taken her to a five star restaurant to celebrate her twenty-sixth birthday, accompany her back home for the hand-made, chocolate and raspberry birthday cake he had spent weeks practicing how to bake just to surprise her; and just before they would turn in for the night, he had planned on surprising her with the five carat, white diamond ring with the matching locket, filled with their picture, that he had saved up for almost six months to purchase for her. Instead, he was breaking her heart, more like ripping it out, in order to keep her safe and away from the vindictive, dirty hands of his malicious parents. Brigitte was his all and they were taking her away from him. She had been there for him a year ago when his older brother, and best friend, had died from brain cancer. She had answered her door or her phone when he needed her to because his nights felt too lonely and cold. She had accepted him with open arms without asking questions, especially when he would shower her with gifts that she knew that he shouldn't be able to afford because he was a struggling sculptor. All the while, he kept parts of his personal life private: like how his parents were one of the wealthiest people in the state of New York, how they had manipulated him and his brother their entire lives and he'd ran away to Philadelphia to escape from it all. Neither did he tell her that they cut him off because of his rebellion nor that they were now threatening to ruin her life if he didn't lose all contact with her. And that he couldn't do to her. His Brigitte had no family, no people she found worthy enough to call friends, and being a waitress in a grimey diner didn't earn her much money either. If only he was financially stable, then he would have been able to tell his parents to screw themselves and not worry about the fact that his mother had bought the entire neighborhood complex and was threatening to evict everyone to demolish it and build a shopping center or that his father was willing to pull strings to leave her legally broke and homeless. Or worse, missing if his son refused to comply. No, he loved her too much to do that to her, but damn it all to hell if it wasn't hurting...more like killing him inside to see her this way. His Brigitte was a gentle woman. She didn't know how to be angry or how to hate. All she ever did was love even when others hurt her and he had promised himself that he wouldn't be one of those people, yet here he was shoving her away from him, making her stumble and fall to the ground and cling to his leg as he dragged her fighting body with him towards the door. "Caid, please, I know that--""When will you get it through that thick head of yours that its over?! Did you really expect for me to bring home some poor, black girl to my parents?"
